Now That We Have Them How Do We Keep Them

People hold the answers - If they can answer the question, How do I win? They will unlock boundless personal resources. The answers to problems facing education are found on the playground. We don't know how to win using what kids do naturally. Behavior determines results, to get better results we must change; conditioning shapes attitude; recreation conditioning is more powerful than what we do in school. Are whale trainers smarter than educators?

BIOGRAPHIES

Charles M. Acklin

Partner and owner of The Game of Work. He has discovered strategies that get results by improving individual and team performance. Chuck began learning about teamwork as a member of a championship drum and bugle corps. Later, he learned how to get individual results while coaching his college martial arts team to two consecutive appearances at the United States National Championships. His productivity successes span both the public and private sectors. He increased the graduation rates of adult college students from 24% to 85%. As a corporate executive he used The Game of Work and led a three-year business change initiative that netted 14% to 293% revenue increases. While with the country's leading gourmet cookie company and during an explosive growth period, his work helped push sales from negative year-over-year results to a positive 144%. Chuck's clients include the United States Ski Team, Fresenius Medical Care-North American, TCI Cablevision, Liberty Diversified Industries, Granite Construction, L3Communications, The National Park Service, Weiser Security, Carr Printing, Simmons Media Group, Muir Copper Canyon Farms and Brigham Young University's Athletic Department. In his spare time, Chuck fly-fishes, explores and surveys caves and is a National Park Service Volunteer Emergency Medical Technician. Chuck and his wife, Karen, live in the Wasatch Mountains on the outskirts of Park City, Utah.

David Anderson

The current Program Coordinator for the 21st Century Community Learning Center. He has worked in as Technology Education teacher for 14 years. David is the Northern regional UtahLINK instructor providing Internet inservice training for teachers and administrators.

She recently received a Masters degree from Utah State university in Instructional Technology and has worked in the computer industry doing computer-based mapping and software training. Her specialties include Dreamweaver and web page design and creation.

Ken Anderson

Dean of Continuing Education, Brigham Young University

David M. Barker

Certified Public Accountant with the Utah Department of Financial Institutions for the last 24 years. He has been a bank and credit union examiner much of that time. During the past few years he has spent most of his time at the Department's office in Salt Lake City receiving calls related to banking, mortgage, and consumer credit issues. Many of those calls are from consumers who have been victims of frauds, scams, high-cost loans, credit card problems, bounced checks, and other financial troubles. As a result of those calls he has identified several tips to help people avoid many of the problems. His experiences as a bank examiner, and as a former collector, have given him unique insights. He has a strong desire to help people avoid common financial problems and enjoys sharing the information with interested groups.

Cynthia Grua

Administrator of the Utah Electronic College, a program of the Utah State Board of Regents. UEC is a consortial effort involving Utah's five two-year colleges. It employs a single catalog, admissions form, and tuition rate to reduce the red tape involved in taking distance learning courses from multiple institutions. Before accepting her current position with the Board of Regents, Ms. Grua was Director of Distance Education for the University of Utah. She earned bachelor's and master's degrees in Communication from that institution.

Spence Hale

Training Consultant for Infinite Mind. Spencer graduated from Ben Lomond High School in 1974. While attending elementary school, he was diagnosed with Dyslexia. Through hard work and determination he was able to make the honor roll. After high school he attended Weber State College and then served two years as a missionary in New England. Still looking for something to improve his reading ability and comprehension, he enrolled and completed the Evenly Wood Reading Dynamic Program. When he found out that one of his children had dyslexic tendencies he began to look for something that would improve her reading, and in so doing, her comprehension. He was introduced to Infinite Mind, a computer software program, that enhances reading, comprehension and retention, by a co-worker at Beneficial Life Insurance Company. He was so delighted with his own personal results, that he purchased the program to try it on his young daughter. The results were dramatic. Spence attended their training program and has been demonstrating the program to schools, correctional institutions and alternative educators ever since. The program is being used successfully at Olympus Jr. High and High Schools with the at-risk students, Weber State University, the Idaho Corrections Institutions, and the New York Police Academy to name a few.
